Omnist the recognition & respect of all religions

No one religion is the truth, but the truth can be found within them all! We are energy, frequency & vibration.

Pantheism

is the belief that God and the universe are the same things rather than separate things. In other words, '

God is all, and all is God.

' Pantheists see God's presence throughout the world.

All is Divine: Pantheism

Pantheism is a profound spiritual belief that asserts the entirety of the cosmos and all within it are divine. As Pantheistic beliefs state, there is no distinct, transcendent, or personal God, but rather an all-inclusive, all intrinsic divine presence that permeates the entire universe. In its most basic form, Pantheists perceive God as an indivisible part of the natural world itself, and not a distinct entity.

The notion of Pantheism was initially introduced in Latin under the name "Pantheisms" by Joseph Raphson in 1697. He made a distinction between two groups of individuals: "Pantheists" who believed that everything was constituted of matter, and "Pantheists" who believed in a universal substance that was responsible for creating everything. Raphson contended that the universe was immeasurable relative to human understanding, and people would never be able to fully comprehend it. The word "Pantheism" comes from the Greek word's "pan" (meaning "all"), and "Theos" (meaning "a god"). It was the compound of these two words that was intended to convey the idea that God is everything, and everything is God.

The beginnings of Pantheism can be followed back to Animistic traditions, where the understanding of the universe as a collective, celestial being was initially being explored. Later on, this notion was refined by intellectuals like Spinoza and Hegel, who underscored the interrelatedness and interdependence of all things in the cosmos.

The Philosophy of Embracing All: Omnidism

Omnism is a relatively modern term for a spiritual philosophy that has probably been around for millennia, which recognises the truth in all religions. This is because the followers believe that every religion or spiritual teaching provides valuable insights into the divine and the purpose of life. They see all spiritual practices as diverse paths leading to a single ultimate destination. Thus, an Omnidist reject the idea of a singular "correct" religion and advocate for respect and acceptance of all spiritual practices; that all should be embraced. However, there is no stipulation as to whether an Omnidist should believe in the existence of a god/s. Thus, this would make Omnidism a spiritual philosophy of religion, rather than a form of religious syncretism.

Advocates of Omnidism often argue that traditional religious structures are frequently restricted by cultural and historical backgrounds, and often do not offer a complete understanding of the divine. Therefore, Omnidism endeavours to transcend these limitations by embracing the wide range of religious and spiritual practices available. By doing so, an Omnidist can hope to attain a more comprehensive and inclusive understanding of these practices and of the divine.

Religion can be seen as an abstract concept that involves their own beliefs, practices, and values that guide the way people live their lives. Acknowledging, and recognising a religion involves more than just recognising the name of the religion or its symbols. It requires an understanding and empathetic link to its history, beliefs, people, and practices, and an appreciation of its cultural significance.

The word "omni" comes from the Latin for "all", and the term "ism" (meaning "to take side of") originates from Ancient Greek. Thus, Omnidism. The term "Omnidist" is believed to have its origins in the late 19th century, when Phillip James Bailey coined the term in his poem "Festus". In my opinion however, the original phrasing he used in the poem exhibits an "Unlimited Henotheistic" perspective. While I believe an Omnidist can be Henotheists, not all Omnidists have to be, as Omnidism is about the acknowledgement and recognition of other religions and their gods, not belief in the existence of the gods.

And yet; we still as humans must label every concept of being, you must fit into a certain box, a certain belief system, regardless of what we all believe not one of us can conquer other than oneness our own belief and this you have a right too in the all-knowing consciousness.
